Course Description

This course provides an overview of theoretical approaches as well as various analytical strategies related to internationally comparative research in general and across Europe. Lectures contour European societies based on selected topics related to social and demographic change. The discussion of comparative sociological research on Europe (and beyond) will be illuminated by drawing upon pertinent comparative studies adopting different modes of research methodology and design (e.g., small-N vs. large-N, cross-sectional vs. longitudinal). The course presents common issues in applying qualitative as well as quantitative techniques of comparison and possible solutions as found in the literature.
