Course Description

This course examines the evolution of the People's Republic of China (PRC) from a revolutionary power to a reformist socialist power to a major global power on the world stage. It provides an analytical framework and tools for analyzing Chinese international power. Topics covered include key factors that have driven and shaped the PRC's foreign policy, the structural forces and institutional processes of foreign policy-making in the PRC, the development of key foreign policy issues confronting the PRC today, the future role of the PRC in the world, and the relationship between the PRC and various world powers, including the United States, Russia, Japan, and ASEAN. Students also examine the impact of international organizations, globalization, technological advancement, and economic developments.
