Course Description
The course consists of two components: lectures on quantitative and qualitative research methods and research groups in which students engage in research exercises, from developing a research proposal to conducting a research project. It focuses on a variety of contemporary South African themes, problems, and topics. The lectures provide an introduction to research methods to prepare students for conducting their own research projects. The research group meetings deal with substantive, methodological, and theoretical issues related to the research proposal and offer personal supervision for research project work. Assessment: coursework (70%) and a final exam (30%).
