Course Description
In current scholarship in the field of Japanese Studies, an increasing number of research topics have centered on food. This course examines Japanese food culture in a more global context, from ancient times to the present day. It focuses on the interaction between the Japanese archipelago and the outside world. By studying the evolution of Japanese food culture throughout history, different stages of adaptation are explored. In the second half of the semester, the course deals with a number of contemporary, food-related phenomena in an attempt to better understand what Japan and the Japanese are today.
