Course Description

This class is an opportunity to engage critically with all aspects of the experience studying in Morocco, and further understanding of various issues in Moroccan culture and society. The texts and topics addressed include language, history, economics, literature, religion, arts, politics, and gender issues. The course takes into account the heterogeneity of Moroccan society, keeping in mind the country's connection to its broader geographical context. It views Morocco from both local and regional standpoints while simultaneously relating it to student's own perspectives. This comparative approach serves to identify the dynamics of Moroccan culture's major patterns and what drives the behavior, attitudes, value,s and judgments of Moroccans.
