Course Description

This course provides a study of how housing markets work and the roles of policy in housing production, consumption, investment and governance. The course introduces basic housing economic concepts that can help to understand housing markets, cycles, and housing finance. It examines the roles of housing policies in delivering and governing a housing provision system, for example, the policies to promote homeownership and the roles of town councils in housing estate management. Cases and examples are drawn from the housing markets in both Singapore and other countries.
