Course Description

This course introduces the framework of international law (IL), focusing on its basic history, philosophy, structure, and major principles. Previous study of law would be helpful; however, it is not required.

The course also addresses topics such as the sources of international law; the law of treaties, and international law pertaining to personality, statehood and recognition; jurisdiction and sovereignty; nationality; statelessness, and international refugees. It also explores international law with regards to war and security; weapons (nuclear, biological, chemical), and infectious diseases.
