Course Description

This course is an introductory overview of ethical issues and challenges presented by New Media technologies. Emphasis is on the relevance of ethics in activities like creation of regulations and public policies by the State, codes of conduct and social responsibility programs as self-regulating policies by the industry, as well as the formation of activist movements by the civil society. Topics include access, privacy, national security, censorship, surveillance, data protection, among others from the perspectives of different stakeholders. It also examines the difficulties presented by a multi-layered environment; these difficulties require coordinated solutions.
