Course Description
This course surveys the variety of writing in English that is taking place around the world. In order to develop an appreciation of the range of writing in English, this course draws on different modes of literary expression such as novels, short stories, poems, and plays. Importantly, many of the texts chosen are those exploring aspects of cross-cultural, multilingual, or post-colonial experience – experiences which may resonate with the student experience of contemporary Hong Kong. In order to explore the richness of such experiences, this course draws on some relevant analytical approaches and literary theories.
