Course Description

The theme for this course is "Thinking about freedom in the 21st century". The transdisciplinary approach in this course focuses mainly on history, economics, philosophy, literature, geopolitics, and political and cognitive science. Each year, the subject is broken down into cross-cutting themes. The central theme for the 18-19 academic year is: "Can we save the free world? ". The "free world", thought by Roosevelt, Churchill, and de Gaulle, combining democracy with the defense of individual freedom, has for decades been considered obvious in the West, without always measuring its extreme fragility. The course questions what makes the world free -its roots, successes, excesses, and perils- before considering its future in the tornado of the current upheavals.
