Course Description

This course asks students to lead an urban study, in groups of 2 or 3, on the problematic case of "Larger Paris." Guided each step of the way by the instructors, students take the role of an urban planner surveying a site and a given subject. Through this study, inspired by professional practices, this class also offers students a first-hand approach to the broader issues of contemporary urbanism, as well as a look at the large scope of competencies needed to tap into to understand and govern a city: sociological, economic, political, historical, geographical, legal, architectural, and property stakes.
