Course Description

This is an introductory and interdisciplinary survey course on modern Korean history. The course is designed to present a wide ranging written and visual materials and texts on the topic, with the goal of introducing students to various experiences, phases, and issues of modern Korean history. Our goal as a class is to both familiarize ourselves with the larger historical events that shaped the last century for Korea and its people, and to come to our individual, critical understanding of their significance and relevance for today.
