Course Description
This course introduces the history of global economic change from a long-term perspective drawing on the new economic history literature. It is divided into two broadly defined historical periods. The first term, covering the period of 1700-1914, starts with a series of lectures on concepts and debates in global economic history. Topics follow a chronological order as they introduce major turning points in the history of economic change prior to 1914, including the rise of fiscal states, commercial expansion of the West, and financial and monetary transformations.
