Course Description

This course focuses on education in developing nations and relevant theories from the fields of economics, political science, international relations, anthropology, and post-structural studies. It familiarizes the class with the institutions involved with education policy and development, such as the United Nations, the World Bank, the OECD, bilateral aid agencies, and transnational and grassroots NGOs (nongovernmental organizations) and their activities in various regions and during different historical periods.

The first part of the course examines the different theoretical frameworks and approaches to international educational development (IED) as they address the issues during various historical periods in the field. The second part explores and discusses the practices of institutions and actors involved with IED at international, national, sub-national, and grassroots levels.
