Course Description
This course examines the role of the Internet in cultural and socio-political development, looking at the concepts of Internet imaginaries, network society, and participatory cultures. Relying on these concepts the course presents an introductory overview of the history of Runet. From there, the course looks at four spaces of the Russian contemporary society: social space, cultural space, media space, and political space. The course brings all four spaces together to form a comparative conclusion about the role of the Internet in a contemporary Russian society.
