Course Description
This one-semester course covers world history from the late 19th century to the Second World War, looking beyond Eurocentric perspectives and taking a global approach. The module traces the history of globalization in this period: the expanding processes of economic, technological, social, cultural and intellectual change, and the uneven integration of different parts of the globe into these processes since the 1870s. Students explore a diverse range of grounded perspectives on everyday life across the globe in this period, considering the different historical scales on which human lives were lived and shaped. The course also examines the key historical processes and events of the period, including the course and impact of the two world wars.
