Course Description

This course has three components. The first discusses key conceptual tools and theories needed to examine reconciliation and justice in international politics. The second looks at the situations on the ground and asks What are the main cases and issues? What are the general trends in international relations with regards to addressing and redressing justice and reconciliation? What kind of national and global efforts have been made in attempts to help solve them? The third part of the course includes drawing lessons and insights from specific cases in Asia, Europe and Africa. Why do some states promote particular historical narratives and policies? What are the domestic and international consequences of their particular policy choices? Can a country's success story be emulated by another country?
