Course Description
Financial crises are common and occur quite frequently in market economies. What is a financial crisis and what are its possible causes? Can it be anticipated and hence prevented? What government policies can be implemented to alleviate its impact? This course explores financial crises to understand the conceptual underpinnings of the issues that lie at the heart of it. The course focuses on how the financial crisis in 2008 began, how it developed, how the different countries dealt with it with their own politico-economic means and measures, what are the effects on people, and what is its implication for the global economy, and its broader ramifications for our society.
