Course Description
This course focuses on the study of masculinity to explore systemic inequality, and the close relationship between gender and power. The course treats masculinity as a gender identity in constant transformation. The course considers social dynamics, such as sexual-affective relationships, violence, everyday culture and the sexual division of labour. Through diverse theories and analysis of case studies, the masculinity is understood as both a systematic producer of power relations and as a performance of a gender identity. By studying hegemonic masculinity and ways to subvert it, this course provides tools to understand and analyze the dynamics of power, inequality and change.
