Course Description
Any consideration of global citizenship is incomplete without an examination of migration as part of the contemporary world. This course provides an introductory understanding of immigrant entrepreneurs. To understand the operation of immigrant entrepreneurs, we first discuss the general theories of immigrant adaptation. The theoretical framework for understanding migration ranges from the classic Chicago School to the recent institutional approach to migration. We then explore how immigrant entrepreneurship is related to the adaptation and survival strategies taken by immigrants. We focus on how immigrant resources to start their businesses and their impact to ethnic communities. The course also examines policies governing immigration and their impact on global citizenship. Students have an option to visit Taiwan and learn about immigrants and social entrepreneurship there.
