Course Description
This course examines late 20th century feminist writing from literary, philosophical, political, and psychoanalytical perspectives. The first half of the course focuses on a "materialist" feminism anchored in the socialization process and its representation of various mediatic influences and social conventions. The second half examines texts with a more linguistic and psychoanalytic emphasis. The course explores feminist responses to the sociopolitical position of women in France and their critiques of Freudian psychoanalysis, capitalist economies, and Western philosophy. It examines the theory and practice of écriture féminine.
