Course Description
This course assesses globalization from different angles, such as economy (dealing with mobility of production, financial capital and labor), governance and institutional arrangements, culture, society, and geopolitics. Geography is brought in, by considering a) the redefinition of concepts such as place, space, scale, and territorial development, b) the differential experience of globalization in different places, and c) global shifts. The course covers the current debates, thoughts, and anti-sentiments towards globalization. Also covered are the actors and their influence, new global relationships, and the implications of globalization for diverse groups in different societies.
