Course Description
This course covers the comparative history of Indigenous people both in Japan and US. Covering such an immense sweep of time for those large and diverse areas is challenging. After looking at the diverse culture of the Indigenous communities in both countries, focus is on their shared experience, such as the conquest of their regions by immigrants, stereotyped images created through the colonialism, assimilation by the dominant societies, cultural revival and sovereignty, and urbanization. This course also provides the active discussion on colonization, decolonization, and Indigenous sovereignty. Units: The regular version of this course is worth 3.0 UC quarter units. The Q version of this course is worth 4 or 4.5 UC quarter units. Students must submit a special study project form which outlines the requirements for the additional units. This is typically an additional paper graded by the instructor of the course.
