Course Description

This course examines how sociology constructs and discusses the category of poverty and how public politics attempts to fight against it. It also discusses social reproduction and lifestyles of those who are seen as poor. The course considers the question of money, as poverty can be initially thought of as a lack of money, but it is not always through this angle that it is seen. The course relies on reading academic texts as well as analyzing written and iconographic documents which present representations of poverty.
