Course Description
Through a critical reading of European fiction set in Southeast Asia, this course provides a richer understanding of the region in the colonial period, as well as European experiences and images of Southeast Asia. The course also reflects on the medium of fiction – is there something that one can express better through fiction than through academic writing? How do the conventions of academic writing limit what is thought and said? As part of the assessment, students write short stories. In addition to fiction, the course examines paintings, photographs and watches movies.
