Course Description

The objective of this class is to understand how public opinion is formed and to analyze how this opinion, once formed, can influence the political, economic, social and foreign policy decisions. The course looks at all the elements that the citizen, the employee, the member of an association, or a political party uses to form an opinion and how this influences the entity, the political, economic, association or social authorities. Presentations look at all the facets of opinion and how they play in decision-making process, as much to conform to as well as to resist.
