Course Description
This course offers a study of twentieth century Berlin's urban history, a form of historical inquiry that enriches the understanding of cities and urban landscapes. This course is an introduction to specific points of interest in the political, social, and cultural developments in Berlin between the 1920s and the 1990s, and explores how these points of interest illuminate German twentieth century history. The course links city sites, monuments, and buildings to collective memory and political debates. The course discusses twentieth century political events, places, people, buildings, and monuments in Berlin as presented by three urban historians, as well as the basic principles and approaches of urban history. Students participate in audio-guide narrated city walks, research neighborhoods, and take part in an urban preservation project, the restoration of the Alexander Haus in Groß Glienicke, to bring the city's urban history into the present.
