Course Description

Students work primarily with non-fiction texts and exercises with themes relating to Norwegian daily life and society. Important and basic points of grammar are examined, and attention is given to variations in the Norwegian language. Students increase their vocabulary and learn idioms and varied ways of expressing themselves in different contexts. By the end of the course students are able to understand oral presentations on everyday life and current issues, including the ability to understand the main ideas of radio and television programs; to read textbooks and simple authentic texts and newspaper articles; and to have sufficient command of both oral and written Norwegian so that errors do not interfere with communication. This course features an in-class test on the first day of class. Students who fail to document their Norwegian A2 level will be switched to level I.
