Course Description

This course is an introduction to syntactic theory from the standpoint of mainstream generative grammar (i.e., biolinguistics). It focuses on major syntactic phenomena in various languages to see how universal grammar is organized in our mind. Though its main purpose is not to introduce the most current and advanced theory of syntax, discussion sometimes touches upon issues that are currently under debate. The course examines the structure of sentences; phrases; compound and complex sentences; conditions and principles; the interaction of syntax with morphology and semantics. Material to be drawn from various languages.
