Course Description
This course specializes in the study of one of the most intriguing sets of bilateral relations in East Asia: Sino-Japanese relations. The overall theoretical approach of the course is interdisciplinary in nature and draws heavily from the disciplines of history and international relations. The course examines contemporary Sino Japanese relations broadly conceived; introduces topics by means of broad survey lectures, and various controversial topics within this set of bilateral relations; and examines the following themes from the perspective of Sino Japanese relations: legacy of history (e.g., textbook writing, disposal of chemical weapons, wartime apologies), nationalism and identity, the Pinnacles (Senkaku/Diaoyu) Islands dispute, the Taiwan issue, the Korean Peninsula crisis and the competition for energy sources between China and Japan.
