Course Description

This course deals with the concepts of national and personal identities in conflicts. It explores how ethnic, national, and cultural group identity is connected to individual identity, how groups in conflict take part in a dialogue, and how the individuals comprising them do so. Topics include collective memory, ethnic and national group narratives, and ethos. The course integrates theory and practice, providing an opportunity to get acquainted with core theories, experience how group identity is formed, and how a dialogue between opposing sides is conducted. The course includes guest lectures of people, organizations, and institutions who deal with these topics.
