Course Description

This course provides an introduction to American government, covering fundamentals of the U.S. government, such as foundations, institutions, and organizations. Beginning with its Constitutional foundations, the course examines the system of federalism, civil rights, and liberties. It also explores the interactions among the three separate branches of government and discusses the U.S. election system as well as how the electorate responds to and fits into the American system of government. The course also studies the role of informal institutions such as media, political parties, and interest groups.
