Course Description
The course provides an overview of the post-communist development of the societies of Central Europe, i.e. Poland, Slovakia, Hungary, and the Czech Republic. The key political and cultural tendencies permeating Central Europe after the fall of the Berlin Wall are problematized and discussed, as is the question of the region's role as a potential bridge between East and West and North and South. A specialized component addresses the entry and development of the Central European states in the European Union. The states are studied comparatively at the same time as common lines of development are highlighted.
