Course Description
In this interdisciplinary overview, this course explores the intricate ways in which religion and sexuality influence each in contemporary Africa; and an ongoing struggle between contemporary sexual practices and Christianity. The module examines the ways in which culture, religious beliefs, and practices are used to construct and talk about sex and sexuality in the public spaces. In addition, it studies how groups of people and individuals have managed and negotiated the boundaries of normative religions. In the course of the module students explore some of the most controversial debates around religion and sexuality in Africa; gain in-depth knowledge about these debates in their historical, religious, cultural, and political contexts; and develop critical skills to analyZe and reflect upon these debates.
