Course Description
This course introduces students to the law and practice of the European Union (EU) international relations. The EU external action is crucial to understanding how the EU tackles its internal and external crises and new economic, security, and social challenges. The course is developed along four thematic modules. First, it presents the foundations of EU external relations law with a special focus on the EU external relations competences, institutions, and treaty-making powers. Secondly, it deals with current issues of EU diplomacy and the EU's representation in international organizations and multilateral fora. The final part of the course addresses the framing and the implementation of EU's proximity policies, including Brexit, and present contrasting visions on the EU's role as an international actor. Students learn how to critically assess and interpret legal materials of the EU foreign policy and navigate fascinating issues at the crossroads between EU law and diplomacy.
