Course Description
This course provides an understanding of the history of colonial and revolutionary North America from the first English settlement in Virginia to the aftermath of the War of Independence that created the United States. Attention is concentrated on the mainland English colonies, though consideration is given to French, Dutch, and Spanish North America, and to the relationship between English North America and the rest of the Atlantic world. Topics include patterns of migration from the Old World to the New, the introduction of chattel slavery, relations between European incomers and the native inhabitants, religious diversity, and the increasing integration of 18th Britain and its North American colonies.
