Course Description

This course provides an overview of long-term developments in the world economy and reviews how the theoretical insights of social scientists help us to understand world history better. The main emphasis is on understanding the two main problems of social and economic history: what are the origins and drivers of economic growth, and why does that process result in wide disparities in wealth? Students independently carry out a research project and acquire skills relating to social and economic historians, for example, source criticism, and working with data and theory.
