Course Description

This course is about economic dimensions of current challenges facing the European Union. Topics covered include: the consequences of 2007-2008 on the EU; Brexit and new forms of unilateralism in the USA; multinational corporations and technical change; EU and European governments' capacity to regulate and to tax; ecological crises, citizens' health, and the future of mankind on earth. The course selects a number of issues that appear salient in current debates about the EU, its relationship with the rest of the world, and its future. It mobilizes the economist's analytical tool box to shed light on policy decision-making and pending issues.
