Course Description

The course examines the main characteristics of the world economy, in the light of the globalization of economy, politics, and culture taking place over the last decades. Shifts in the center of gravity of the global economic system are outlined, as well as how various regions and countries relate to that system in different ways. Main actors and institutions that influence globalization are identified and analyzed, including multinational corporations, international institutions, and states. Examples from different economic sectors are studied, including how chains of production and consumption have changed and what the impacts have been for places and regions.
