Course Description
This class surveys the challenges faced by emerging economies, with the purpose of covering the main areas at the center of the debate in development economics. It discusses the questions raised, the academic research on these questions, and the possible policy responses. This class covers topics at the individual level (consumption, health and education) as well as at the firm level (contracts, technology, entrepreneurship). The class covers both the empirical studies and the theoretical framework that relate to these topics. By the end of this class, students are expected to be able to understand, evaluate, and design interventions in developing countries. In addition, a discussion over the ethical concerns of these interventions takes place in class.
