Course Description
This course explores the relationship between moving image and film soundtrack as a complex unity of music, speech, and sound effects. Often unnoticed and unacknowledged in film theory and criticism, sound is one of the most expressive elements of film's audio-visual structure and a very potent narrative tool when in the hands of true mavericks. By learning how to listen to film, students discover not only the fundamental formal, narrative, and expressive functions of a film soundtrack but also its role in the creation of film's aesthetic vocabulary.
