Course Description
This course considers the formation of modern Mexico in the 19th and 20th centuries with attention to the analogies, differences, and interrelations with the rest of Latin America. The course focuses on the construction of the nation state and the rise of capitalism; it continues this analysis while exploring the role of social movements to shape these developments. Particular topics include indigenous peoples and modernization, cultural currents and nationality, modernity and industrial utopia, development and stabilization, democracy, student movements, new social issues, the feminist movement, neoliberalism, socio-economic projects and structural adjustment.
