Course Description
Jewish-German thinkers have provided an immense contribution to many fields, such as chemistry, physics, and psychology. This class provides an in depth look at why a large proportion of major German thinkers also happened to be of Jewish descent. Through many texts from Jewish thinkers, this class provides some clarity to the original question, as to why so many educated and influential Germans were also Jewish. This class also sheds light on the exclusion of German-Jewish thinkers, throughout history but specifically at the University of Berlin from 1878-1881, and how that is shown and honored in academic settings in berlin, and Germany to this day.
