Course Description
This introductory course facilitates the exploration of a wide range of children's literature – published across several centuries - from picture books through to adolescent novels to young adult literature. Discussions are positioned within the context of broader literary and cultural debates and incorporate a number of theoretical approaches specific to the study of children's literature. Students are introduced to a series of subject areas including adventure, folklore, child-adult power-relations, education, national identity, narrative voice, gender, and sexuality.
