Course Description

This course examines the social aspects of new and old communication technologies. Communication technologies have been an essential part of our everyday lives. We constantly connect to older communication technologies, such as radio, television, and newspapers, and newer communication technologies, including the internet and mobile phones, to fulfill our daily goals. This course critically examines: 1) How communication technologies are introduced to society and how their use is shaped by various social factors, and 2) How communication technologies influence everyday lives of individuals, organizations, and society.
