Course Description
We engage in interpersonal communication everyday. When you meet new friends, do a job interview, or persuade others in work conferences, you engage in a certain form of interpersonal communication. The goal of this course is to examine important concepts and theories in interpersonal communication and to understand how these principles and concepts can be used to promote effective interpersonal communication. Specifically, the course explores theories in communication and psychology that help our understanding of the mechanisms underlying the development and maintenance of interpersonal relationships. Students also are introduced to classical and recent research studies that apply these theories and concepts to explain our communication behavior in the real world contexts. At the end of the course, students demonstrate their knowledge about communication concepts and theories required to evaluate their own communication relationships as well as identify factors that lead to more effective communication.
