Course Description

This course is a theoretical and analytical introduction to the narratives, styles, and genres of audiovisual media such as film, television, and animation. These audiovisual media are diverse variants of what historically have been termed moving images, defined by media philosopher Noël Carroll as “a mode of communication and expression that can be implemented cinematically, videographically, digitally, and/or in ways which we still have to conceive.” As an introductory course in media and communication studies, this course also offers insight and introductory exercise in scholarly reading, scholarly thinking, and academic writing.
