Course Description
A broad understanding of healthcare systems is the first step toward practicing social work effectively in medical settings. This course introduces Singapore's healthcare system; its demands, its goals, and the burden of disease in Singapore (conditions, injuries, and risk factors that cause mortality and morbidity locally) to gain insights into the nature of social work practice in medical settings. Additionally, the course examines healthcare schemes and subsidies (e.g., MediFund), and various legislation that regulate healthcare professionals, medical practices, and more. Student engage in experiential learning associated with shadowing medical social workers in various settings and linking individuals in the community to the healthcare system.
