Course Description
This course examines the role played by the English language in contemporary Japan. Each class explores this role from various perspectives and in various domains, and, taken together, they represent a wide-range survey of the linguistic, social and cultural issues that arise from the use of English in Japan. A major focus for many of the classes is the educational system, wherein the teaching and learning of English, as well as policies and planning regarding English, operate as a primary means of mediation between the language and society.
