Course Description
Introduction to Pacific Studies and Culture. This is a survey course on a range of Pacific nations, covering socio-cultural, geographical, economic, and historical issues including indigenous perspectives. This course is a journey through the immense geographic, historical, cultural, political and economic diversity of the Pacific Islands region. A particular focus of this course is on the intellectual and academic heritage of Pacific Studies, so questions of what it means to study the Pacific when the university is our anchor are explored.
